CLAASSEN'S SEARCH FOR BAIL. Ex-President of the Sixth National Bank Peter J. Claassen made his daily visit to United States Marshal Jacobus's office in the Post-Office this morning.

He looked pale and careworn as though his nightly rests in Ludlaw Street Jail were beginning to tell on him.

He arrived a few initutes before 11 o'clock, in company with Marshals Adler and Van Buskirk. His wife was there to meet him, and the prisoner gave her a

BEFORE COMMISSIONER SHIELDS.

Classen was this afternoon arraigned before United States Commissioner Shields for examination on the charge of embezzing the Sixth National's funds.
The room usually occupied by the Commissioner was found to be too small and an adjournment was taken to Judge Wallace's court on the fourth floor.

Here there was ample room for the crowd of curious people who pushed into the court-room, anxious to get a glimpse of the man who had followed in the footsteps of Napoleon Ives.

Classen was there, surrounded by counsel, of whom ex-District-Attorney Benjamin F. Foster was the shining light. Classen was apparently cool and collected.

PROSECUTION THE WORD,

Cleases and Pell are believed to be only humble partners in the conspiracy, and the depositors of the Lenox Hill Bank especially want to know why the head men in the deal are not brought to the front. They do not believe in cancelling and destroying faisely certified checks and letting the bold highwaymen who were surprised in their little game go scot free.
